Active Travel

Do you find walking or cycling to shops, train stations, bus stops or school tiring or troublesome, particularly in unpleasant weather conditions? Would you prefer to drive? Governments and organizations globally have recently been creating policy called Active Travel, which seeks to discourage the use of cars for short trips and encourage walking and cycling for everyday activities. However, for residents in Japan and Aichi in particular, the car continues to dominate, a worrying trend considering its label as a 'super-aged' society. This seminar will highlight why walking and cycling trips in your everyday life are so important for both you personally, and for society, discussing factors which contribute to better and more sustainable environments.
